ForA self-assembled nanofiber of amphiphilic copolymer with a poly(ethylene glycol) chain and hyaluronic acid stabilizes the distribution of bovine chondrocyte-derived calcium phosphate. Inorganic calcium phosphate nanofibers were prepared using a novel technique in which a self-assembled amphiphilic polymer was used as a spacer to stabilize the distribution of calcium phosphate over the surface. A self-assembled amphiphilic copolymer composed of poly(ethylene glycol) (PEG) and hyaluronic acid (HA) was prepared by copolymerization of glycidyl methacrylate (GMA) and N-vinylpyrrolidone (VP) with HA-containing methacrylic acid (MA) as a comonomer. Nanofibers were made by drying the amphiphilic copolymer solution in methylene chloride on a silicon wafer.

The incorporation of HA increased the hydrophilicity of the polymer, thereby increasing the stability of the nanofibers in aqueous medium. The morphology of the nanofiber was maintained well in physiological environments such as phosphate-buffered saline and serum.

Bovine chondrocyte-derived calcium phosphate (BCP) seeded on the surface of the nanofibers showed favorable cell-nanofiber interactions. The mineralization process was completed in 10-14 days. The mineralized BCp-nanofiber sheet was attached to the ectopic bone of rat, and BCP was successfully incorporated into the bone tissue. The results of this study demonstrate that the hydrophilic and hygroscopic self-assembled nanofibers could be a biomaterial for the stabilization of the biomaterial in a physiological environment and the distribution of BCP into the surrounding bones.
